Choosing an Executor:

Choosing a professional as your Executor will result in having your estate settled by an impartial third party and by one who is experienced in estate matters. The estate will be done quickly, effectively and the beneficiaries will appreciate not having the added stress of estate management at the time of loss of a loved one. A professional as a co-Executor with a family member is another option for Executor choices.

You should consider the following questions when choosing an Executor and an alternate Executor:

- Are you confident that the person you are considering will be available during the time needed, taking time off of work and able to commit that time and energy until the estate is completely settled?
- Does the person live in British Columbia?
There are often complications if the Executor is from out of province, particularly if out of country.
- Is the person you are considering experienced in dealing with the legal, tax, investment, real estate, asset valuation, insurance and business management aspects of estate settlement?
- Are you aware that the person you are considering can be personally liable if their action or judgment is challenged?
- Can the person you are considering remain impartial and able to work well with the beneficiaries?
- Is the person you are considering free of any conflicts of interest?

- Is the person you are considering someone other than the guardian of your minor children?
- Have you advised her/him of the location and contents of your will and has he or she agreed to take on the responsibility?
